Domestic animals are those that are tamed by us for our good. All animals were wild in the beginning when life emerged on earth. When man shed his hunting life, he started keeping some animals like the cow, the horse, the sheep and the dog. The cows gave milk while the horse carried loads. The dog was the most useful animal for him as it guarded his cattle and also helped him in hunting. Since then, we have been domesticating animals that serve us in various ways. Some of them are milch cattle and provide us with milk which is certainly a valuable source of diet. Some domestic animals give us rides and carry our loads. Still others work on our farms and help us grow all the crops we need. There are few domestic animals being kept as pets for fun only. Thus, we see that domestic animals are very useful to us as they do us a lot of good while alive. They are also useful to us after their death. Leather, bones, ivory and fur of the dead animals are of immense utility.
